

Eric Windsor Weidmann, M.D.

Dr. Weidmann is a Family Doctor practicing since 1989 in Austin, Texas with his five associates at South Austin Medical Clinic, a very busy full service practice established in 1965. He co-developed and directed Austin Regional Independent Associates, a 500 physician/80,000 patient IPA founded in 1996. His practice and medical community involvement, since beginning residency in 1985, has provided him with extensive managed care experience in the arenas of private practice, hospital networks, insurance contracting, physician IPAs and electronic health information systems. Involvement with the Primary Care Network since 1997 has satisfied his love for learning and teaching, yet reducing student and resident contact to an occasional 3 months. Various consulting duties include health policy analysis, information systems, legal reviews, clinical research and lecturing. Dr. Weidmann enjoys delivering patient care and is deeply involved in shaping the systems by which health care is delivered in the United States.

Dr. Weidmann is a graduate from The University of Texas at Austin in Electrical Engineering, U.T. Southwestern Medical School in Dallas and the Brackenridge Family Practice Residency in Austin, Texas. He was Assistant Clinical Professor at The University of Texas Medical Branch at Galveston from 1990 to 2000 and was Assistant Director of Family Practice education from 1989 to 1991 at Central Texas Medical Foundation Family Practice Residency in Austin.

Eric is a native Texan, avid cyclist, naturalist and devoted family man!
